

Verifiers of AIG, early-bird winners of the BOM subscription plan:

I am delighted to be here with you today. I know that everyone present is an expert who can perceive opportunity early and find direction through the fog of the market.

We are once again approaching a tense and exciting Friday, with the pre-market release of the PCE data acted like a calming injection for the market.

The figure came in as expected, which means that at least in the short term, the ‘beast’ of inflation is not as ferocious as we imagined. The market breathed a temporary sigh of relief, and everyone could catch their breath.

But this is only the calm before the storm, friends. The real test still lies ahead.

The Federal Reserve’s grand drama of rate cuts is the biggest storyline of the year. And the next data point that can truly stir the markets is the non-farm payrolls to be released next Friday. This is no ordinary statistic—it is the one figure that can genuinely command market attention and influence the Fed’s rate-cut decision. Everyone is watching it as if it were a ticking bomb. If the data prove too strong, the market may begin to fear that the Fed will delay its rate cuts.

Why? Because non-farm payrolls are like the ‘final piece of the puzzle’ on the Federal Reserve’s table. With the rate-cut trajectory already set, other indicators are mere accompaniments, only employment can directly determine the confidence with which they press the ‘rate-cut button.’

But do not forget, this unresolved data will not truly alter the Fed’s fundamental course. Behind the scenes, there is a ‘larger, stronger hand’ steering the wheel. Who is it? Trump. Over the Labor Day holiday, he is interviewing candidates for the next Federal Reserve Chair.

Put plainly, this is about tying monetary policy to political timing, making rate cuts a foregone conclusion. Such is the perennial rule of American politics: when the economy reaches a turning point, monetary policy becomes the best catalyst for votes.

The PCE data is only a minor interlude; non-farm payrolls are the real climax. Yet the decisive factor is Trump's choice of the ultimate 'trump card.'

It is like a poker game: you think the contest is about the cards on the table, but the winner has already secured the ace in hand.

Financial markets are not the neat curves in a textbook, they are a grand drama where human nature, politics, and capital are woven together. What we must watch today is not only the Fed's data tables, but also the invisible hand behind the politics.

Next Friday, the market's emotions will be ignited by the jobs report. But let us not forget—the real force driving the rate-cut decision is not the cold numbers, but the logic of power and elections.

The bell of rate cuts has already begun to toll, and the winners will be those who can see through to the logic behind it.

Today the market appears calm, yet you and I both know this ‘calm’ is often just the quiet breath before the storm.

The PCE data came in as expected, and the market’s mood shifted briefly, like a stone dropped into a lake, ripples spreading a few circles before slowly settling again.

Such short-term fluctuations, in truth, are more emotional reflex than a genuine turning point in trend.

Smart money long ago learned not to be startled by such small splashes.

When we turn our gaze to the crypto market, the ETH/BTC trend evokes a ‘familiar signal.’

Today’s brief pullback closely resembles the volatility on the eve of the Federal Reserve’s rate cut in September 2024.

History seems to wink at us as if to say: the ending has already been written, only waiting for time to unveil it.

In the 1970s, the United States endured the hardship of stagflation —high inflation, weak employment, and the dollar’ s purchasing power melting away like ice under the sun.

At that time, some clung stubbornly to their bank deposits, only to watch their assets shrink before their eyes.

Others seized the moment to buy into gold, even real estate.

Though short-term swings were nerve-racking, over the long horizon they emerged as the winners.

Today, the ETH/BTC trend is sending us the same reminder: the future victors will not be those clutching cash too afraid to act, but those who dare to seize undervalued positions amid volatility.

The market’ s most brutal trait is not its violent rises and falls, it is its ability to provoke hesitation, to make people miss out.

Short-term effects like the PCE data, and the minor pullback in ETH/BTC, are in truth tests of our conviction.

This is a psychological obstacle course the market sets for investors.

Either you let emotions drag you into chasing highs and selling lows, or you learn to let logic suppress emotion, quietly planting the seeds of future wealth while others retreat.

If, in September 2024, someone had told you that the Fed's rate cuts would inevitably lift risk assets, and that ETH and BTC would be the most direct beneficiaries, would you have gone all in at the time?

Unfortunately, reality is that most hesitated, only to regret it once the market had surged to new highs.

And today, we stand once again at almost the same juncture. Must we repeat the mistake?

The Fed's rate cuts are still advancing, and the purchasing power of the dollar is being diluted bit by bit, while the logic of scarce on-chain assets is harder than any printing press. Those who hold dollar savings may see their account balances unchanged, but purchasing power erodes with each passing day.

Do not forgo the chance to build reserves. A better price is not a reason for fear, but a moment for courage.

Pals, we are all waiting for the ‘opening moment’ of the BOM new token, the instant like the countdown chime of New Year’s Eve, when the curtain on a new wealth story will be fully drawn.

But during this waiting interval, are we simply to sit idle, watching the market’s pendulum swing back and forth?

No! True winners never let time slip through their fingers, they look for additional profit opportunities, turning waiting time into a stage for harvest.

Within INDEXBIT crypto trading center lies an overlooked ‘blue ocean of profit’: the trading opportunities from the realm of fiat on/off ramp services—what we call currency surfing.

Some of you may hear the words ‘currency surfing’ and wonder: what is that?

Is it just another gimmick?

Let me translate it plainly: currency surfing means riding the short-term waves of volatility in the crypto market—like a surfer balancing on towering waves, going with the momentum, entering and exiting quickly, and harvesting wave after wave of short-term gains.

It is entirely different from the long-term positioning of new-token STO subscriptions.

Subscribing to a new token is like investing in space exploration—it requires patience, waiting for the launch window.

And currency surfing, on the other hand, is like standing on a surfboard at the shore, catching one wave after another, enjoying the adrenaline rush while also accumulating substantial profits.

Many people approach this strategy with a mix of anticipation and fear.

They anticipate it because volatility brings opportunity; they fear it because in short-term trading, one misstep and the wave can crash you into the sea.

But the good news is—we are not entering the arena alone.

Here we introduce today's key player— Acumeta's auxiliary tools.

Acumeta's tools act as a kind of 'surf stabilizer.'

They do not trade on your behalf, but they capture market signals in real time, translating complex volatility into intuitive prompts. In the ultra-short-term waves, they help you find the right rhythm, so you are not knocked senseless to the ocean floor.

Even more importantly, they help lock in risk, ensuring that short-term operations do not turn into gambling, but instead become high-probability wealth 'harvesters.'

Just a few weeks ago, the joint pullback of ETH and BTC was a perfect surfable wave. Most people, gripped by fear, chose to stand aside or cut losses. But with Acumeta's guidance, those who dared to ride the wave captured a sweet profit within mere hours. That is the difference: some see the storm and retreat, others see the opportunity and enter.

I must be frank: currency surfing is not a shortcut to ‘easy wins.’
It requires the combination of mindset, rhythm, and tools.

Without tools, rushing in blindly only leads to being wiped out. With tools but a broken mindset—hesitating again and again, failing to enter when you should, failing to exit when you must, so, the result is still missed opportunities.

The true winners know how to use Acumeta, making the tool their ‘market radar,’ and then striking decisively at the right moment.

Do not forget, our present situation is unique—the subscription for the BOM new token is about to arrive. That is a long-term wealth strategy, a journey as grand as a ‘moonshot.’

But before that, currency surfing is our near-shore training ground, our warm-up stage in advance.

As the saying goes: ‘Plant trees for the long term, fish for the short term.’

You cannot only keep your eyes fixed on the forest in the distance while ignoring the shoals of fish right before you.

And here is the most remarkable part: the two approaches do not conflict.

On the contrary, the short-term gains from currency surfing can become your ‘ammunition depot’ for subscribing to the BOM new token.

The profits you harvest while surfing market waves can ultimately be channeled into your long-term positioning—transformed into the fuel that propels your wealth spacecraft.

It is a perfect coordination, just like warming up with a sprint before running a marathon, bringing your body into peak condition.

Let me begin by sharing the latest ‘official bombshell’ —according to the BOM token pre-issuance announcement, the minimum entry threshold has quietly risen to 1x6000 units, which is equal to 6000 USDC.

Well, you heard that right, no longer is it a matter of tossing in a small wallet for some ‘pocket-change play.’ It now requires real capital to gain entry.

What does this mean? It means the official process is already filtering participants—making it instantly clear who are true actors and who are merely bystanders joining the crowd.

Do not treat the waiting period before the BOM subscription as idle time, view it instead as a wealth surfing boot camp. The market waits for no one, and when the waves arrive, you either ride them or get thrown back onto the shore. The difference lies in whether you are willing to use tools like Acumeta to turn yourself into a true ‘surfing master.’

Wealth has never favored onlookers, it rewards only the brave and the prepared. Today's currency surfing is the perfect chance to ready your wallet. When the BOM token countdown hits 0, you will realize that you are no longer just a spectator—you are the protagonist, holding your positions and returning fully laden with profit.

The BOM token pre-issuance is not prepared for those who want to 'try their luck.' It is for those who are prepared, who think in scale, and who can shoulder the weight.

But here's the point, everyone knows that 6000 USDC is not pocket change. How can you ready your capital more fully in a short time, and secure more subscription shares? The answer is—currency surfing.

Currency surfing, put simply, is using short-term volatility in the crypto market to capture quick profits with small positions. It does not require you to hold for months, it is like surfing—one wave, one ride, one harvest of returns. And best of all, you are not battling alone in this process.

Because we have Acumeta's comprehensive signal-capturing system.

A few years ago, I went salmon fishing in Alaska with several friends. On my first attempt, I cast my line relying only on instinct, and after an entire day, I caught nothing. But the old fisherman beside me pulled up fish one after another with ease.

Why? Because he had a small sonar detector that told him exactly where the schools of fish were.

Do you think that was luck? No, it was the power of tools.

Acumeta is like that sonar. It finds the shoals in the undercurrents of the market, gives us signals, and tells us when to act.

So you are no longer striking blindly—you are aiming with precision.

Now let me return to reality. The threshold for BOM is 6000 USDC, and for some friends, this may mean straining already tight cash flow, or even giving up other opportunities.

But if you are wise, you will understand—rather than forcing your way in blindly, it is better to use currency surfing first, turning profits into your subscription capital.

By committing just 5 – 15% of your position to surfing today, you may, within a week or two, secure an additional portion of BOM subscription allotment.

It is like grabbing a fuel pack on the track in advance, by the time you run the full course, you will finish more easily, more confidently, than the rest.

Moreover, currency surfing carries an extra benefit—it sharpens your sensitivity to the market.

Just as athletes must warm up before competition, your capital, your mindset, and your feel for execution are all refined in the process of surfing.

So when the BOM token's true opening moment arrives, you will not be a nervous novice, but a trained market surfer—equipped with tools and fortified with experience.

This is the wisdom of position management. Today I strongly urge you—fund your account, and put only 5 – 15% of your capital into currency surfing.

Why? Because it is a safe starting point.

It allows you to participate and profit, without being swept away by the waves. That is strategy—not gambling.

At the very moment we successfully harvested profits from the AIG token, I dare say many of you felt as if Columbus had just discovered the Americas—suddenly you realized: the world is larger than we imagined, and opportunities are closer than we thought!

But, the success of the AIG token opened our eyes completely: on-chain token projects can generate, in the shortest of cycles, profits that were almost unreachable over years in the past.

This is not merely a story of making money, it is a glimpse of a new continent of wealth.

And within this new continent, the most exhilarating discovery was what we later came to call—currency surfing.

Currency surfing is not some lofty technical jargon. At its core, it is very simple: capturing short-term market swings, using agility to steadily pocket profits from one small wave after another.

Sounds a lot like the sport of surfing, doesn't it? Exactly! Its charm lies in this: you do not need to wait weeks for a massive wave to ride. You can dance among the surf every single day, enjoying both the rush of speed and the joy of returns.

The profits from the AIG token were the ‘big wave,’ but currency surfing is the series of smaller daily waves.

We cannot afford to wait only for once a year mega projects—we must turn daily market fluctuations into both our training ground and our cash machine.

And as it happens, this week’s timing could not be better.

Friday is not just another trading day, it is our moment of credibility defense, when we fulfill our promise and repay the earlier 800 USDC collateral financing.

But Friday’s credibility defense is not a shackle—it is a booster.

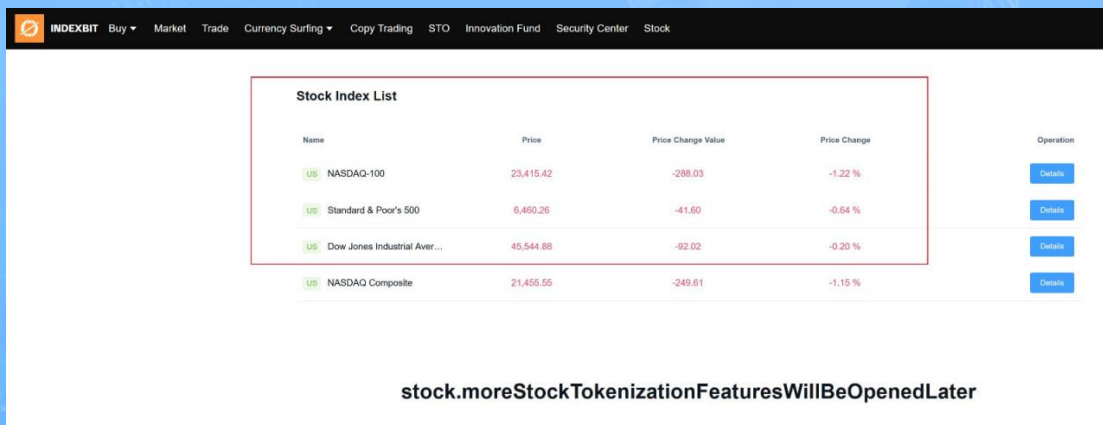

Because we know time is pressing, we must strike decisively in the market, converting currency-surfing profits into more capital, repaying the obligation while simultaneously building stronger financial power.

And more importantly, we are not fighting alone. We have tools like Acumeta's signal-capturing system, like a radar for night flights, helping us see direction clearly in the dark volatility of the market. Do not focus only on the gold mine while ignoring the small nuggets beneath your feet.

This afternoon, we will continue to explore how the BOM early bird subscription plan can deliver new peaks of profit, sooner rather than later!

Pals:

On Friday afternoon, the atmosphere felt heavy.

The stock market was sliding downward, the red numbers on the screen drained people's spirits, and even the will to trade seemed to be worn away bit by bit.

At such moments, many choose to shut down their computers, go for a drink, or simply use the weekend as an excuse to escape reality.

But you and I both know: true opportunities rarely appear when everything is smooth sailing, they hide in those moments when market sentiment is weakest and most distracted.

And right when the stock market left people disheartened, the crypto market offered an entirely different turning point.

The quantitative strategy portfolio produced a new flash of profit, like sunlight breaking through a cloudy sky, illuminating those investors still willing to seek opportunity.

That is the magic of markets: when one door closes, another window quietly opens.

Well, AIG once set our passions ablaze, but it now belongs to the past.

And we are grateful for the profits and confidence it brought us, yet the voyage of wealth never stops at a single island.

What truly deserves our full commitment now is the BOM new token STO project.

This is not some casual opportunity, it is a feast of on-chain wealth that, over the next 10 days, we cannot afford to ignore.

Some may ask me: ‘How can you be so certain about the grand prospects and explosive demand of this project?’

Let me share a real story. Twenty years ago, I knew an old friend who started a business in San Francisco. At the time, everyone believed the ‘Internet bubble’ had burst—who would still invest in online companies?

But he told me: ‘When most people are staring only at failures, the few see the continuation of the trend.’ So he placed all his money on the rise of e-commerce.

And ten years later, his name shone brightly on the wealth rankings.

Today’s crypto market is strikingly similar to the internet of old.

Generates something
AIG was the first wave of ‘e-commerce’ that gave us a taste of profits, but BOM is the ‘Amazon’ now on the rise.

It is not merely a new token, it is a structural opportunity in the blockchain world, which is combining on-chain financing, innovative mechanisms, and immense scarcity-driven demand.

In other words, it is not a fleeting gimmick, but a game powerful enough to reshape the distribution of wealth.

To put it more simply: while most of the market is still disheartened by the downturn in equities, a few are already preparing funds for the early bird plan, focusing on subscribing to BOM.

While mainstream capital remains on the sidelines, the smart money has already begun to slip in. This is what we call foresight.

Remember, true wealth does not come from chasing after everyone else has seen the opportunity, but from daring to place your bet when others hesitate.

Pals:

What I want to discuss with you today is not just a cold, technical white paper, nor is it merely another STO project in the crypto market that looks like ‘one more of the same.’

What we are talking about is the larger narrative behind BOM, the far-reaching framework and the explosive wealth imagination it is about to unleash.

I know, every day countless tokens are issued on the market. Some are like meteors streaking across the night sky—briefly dazzling, then vanishing without a trace.

But why can BOM be defined as an extraordinary, high-quality STO project?

Because its underlying logic is not ‘riding the hype,’ but positioning itself squarely on the superhighway of space commercialization.

You must understand, every industry tied to space has always carried with it national strategy, technological breakthroughs, and waves of capital, and when these three forces converge, they almost never fail.

Let me guide you through 6 perspectives to break down, piece by piece, the logic behind this high-quality STO project.

And for information on the BOM white paper, please contact the official customer service team to obtain it.

First perspective: Trump's executive orders

Do you remember those executive orders on aerospace that Trump issued during his term?

At the time, many dismissed them as mere hype, but looking back today, they marked a large-scale 'release of market vitality.'

Easing approval thresholds handed countless entrepreneurs, business leaders, and investors their entry ticket.

Do you know that every time the United States relaxes entry barriers to an industry, it unleashes a wave of wealth?

Financial derivatives in the 1980s, the internet in the 1990s, and crypto assets after 2010—without exception.

So when executive orders give the green light to aerospace and space-related industries, it means that a brand-new wealth frontier is opening.

And BOM happens to be positioned at this golden inflection point.

Second perspective: America's return to the Moon in 2026-2027.

I often say that space technology is like a nation's 'muscle show.' When the United States announced its plan to return to the Moon in 2026, this was not merely a NASA project, it was another sharp display of America's technological strength.

Just as after the Apollo landings, children around the world began dreaming of becoming astronauts, the collective imagination of society was set alight.

Today, as space once again moves to the forefront of national strategy, this surge of 'technological imagination' will inevitably spill into investment, consumption, and industry.

BOM's positioning is precisely to convert that grand dream into an investable on-chain asset.

In other words, you are not merely investing in a token, you are purchasing a ticket into the future space economy.

Generates something

Third perspective: Blue Origin' s crypto payment innovation

Let' s talk about something interesting. Jeff Bezos' s Blue Origin announced that it will accept BTC and ETH as payment for space travel.

This is huge! Its symbolic significance goes far beyond the surface: it marks the first time a traditional giant has treated crypto assets as hard currency in commercial space.

Can you imagine? In the future, booking a ticket to space could be just like using your credit card today to buy a flight to Hawaii, only instead of swiping Visa, you' ll be paying in BTC/ETH/USDC, with settlement processed in milliseconds.

And what does this mean?

It means that on-chain assets and commercial space are forming a real, closed loop.

And isn' t BOM precisely the 'financial engine' within this very loop?

It is the bridge between the new monetary system and the new industry, a vision far greater than the narrow narrative of simple token speculation.

Generates something

Fourth perspective: Celebrities and billionaires driving space consumption

Have you noticed? Whenever celebrities and billionaires step into a consumer trend, the craze often spreads like wildfire.

From luxury yachts in Miami, to electric cars in Silicon Valley, to NFT collections in Hollywood, it has always been the same pattern.

Today, as countless celebrities and billionaires rush to experience space travel, it is not merely a personal ‘dream come true.’ It is pulling aerospace into mainstream culture and social conversation.

Just imagine: when the next billionaire posts a ‘space selfie’ on their social feed, how many people will be tempted to follow?

And BOM’s positioning is precisely to lock in on this wave of consumer upgrade in advance.

It is not selling tickets, but it is the on-chain financial instrument, the leverage that can move this entire new consumption model.

Fifth perspective: Space logistics and rocket parcels

At first hearing, many might think this sounds like science fiction, but in fact, it is already on the way.

Imagine, when rockets are no longer just vehicles for astronauts, but evolve into a form of high-speed logistics—delivering parcels to any corner of the globe.

Amazon's 'next-day delivery' could be completely redefined as ‘next-hour delivery.’

And what underpins this kind of space logistics?

It requires launch-management platforms, and it requires capital-matching and asset-management tools.

This is precisely where BOM makes its entry. Just as UPS and FedEx could not have scaled without Wall Street’s support, tomorrow’s rocket logistics will also need an on-chain financial hub to sustain it.

BOM is that indispensable ‘financial gear.’

Sixth perspective: Musk's Starship program

Finally, we must speak of Musk. Starship is not just a rocket—it is a symbol that redefines the entire industry's valuation.

For the first time, it makes us truly believe that Mars is not a dream, but the 'next stop.'

When an industry gains such massive capacity for expansion, how does capital respond?

Without question, it rushes in. Over the past decade, Tesla lifted the valuation of the electric vehicle sector to unprecedented heights.

In the decade to come, SpaceX and the broader space economy will push the aerospace track onto a new wealth pyramid.

And BOM will emerge as an essential stake in this capital race.

BOM TOKEN ECONOMICS

BOM is a blockchain platform for aerospace technology BLOMS. The issued digital tokens aim to provide an efficient, secure, and convenient medium of value exchange for various transactions and interactions within the platform.

Project Name Blockchain Launch & Orbital Maintenance System

Token Name: BOM Total Supply: 600 million

Specific allocation:

- STO Issuance and circulation share: 25%, all by the market STO Output, no lock up, release all before going online;
- Technical team: 25%, locked for 5 years, and then released 2% annually until all releases are completed;
- Operation: 15%, reviewed by the foundation and distributed irregularly. The specific release ratio will be announced in the community;
- Foundation: 15%, lock up for 4 years, then release 1% every quarter, mainly used for handling public relations and rewarding users and institutions who have contributed to the platform;
- Market marketing airdrop: 20%

From executive orders to national programs, from the innovations of industry giants to celebrity-driven trends, from the vision of rocket logistics to the dream of Starship—the six perspectives together form one complete proof: the space economy is on the verge of explosion, and BOM is precisely the on-chain engine of that boom.

The valuation of U.S. commercial space enterprises has surged in recent years. SpaceX, as the leading example, reached an estimated $350 billion valuation in early 2025, making it one of the highest-valued unicorns in the world.

Other U.S. commercial space companies have followed suit, with valuations rising sharply, reflecting both the sector's rapid growth and immense market potential, which has attracted a flood of investment.

U.S. commercial space company Firefly Aerospace has undergone a remarkable transformation. With its successful IPO earlier this month, it is now valued at around $7 billion. Meanwhile, the red-hot $RKLB is trading near $23 billion.

According to Acumeta's analysis of industry valuation premiums and demand, the BOM token STO is expected to launch with a valuation between $1 and $1.5 billion.

This implies that the listing price of the token could increase by as much as 800 – 1000%.

What is the greatest lesson we learned from the subscription process and post-listing performance of the AIG token?

It's simple—any blockchain project with strong valuation potential and broad application prospects will always be pursued at breakneck speed and sold out by the market.

This is not a theory, it is a real case of success validated, then missed.

Some laughed as they harvested profits, while others could only watch helplessly as the market took off. Because winners are never those who are 'a step too slow,' but those who position early, prepare ahead of time, and have everything in place before the opportunity arrives.

Today, how can we fully replicate the experience of the AIG subscription into the upcoming BOM token STO early bird subscription plan?

Remember this: opportunity rewards only those who are prepared.

For BOM, we must adopt the Early Bird Subscription Plan:

First: Prepare your funds in advance and deposit them into your account at INDEXBIT crypto trading center. Recharge your crypto reserves so that you are fully ready to subscribe to BOM in the very first second.

Second: Arrange ahead of time with a P2P exchange merchant to convert your traditional cash or U.S. dollar reserves into USDC. This step requires a bit of lead time, and you will need to consult the P2P official support team to obtain quota approval.

Only by taking these steps can you secure a satisfactory allocation of BOM in the subscription distribution ahead.

I often compare such opportunities to an exclusive party, you need the invitation, you must arrive early, and you want to be on the dance floor before the DJ plays the first song. Otherwise, when the floor is packed and the champagne bottles are popping, if you try to squeeze in then, you' ll be left at the door watching the show.

No time to waste—step up your preparations! BOM subscriptions will launch right after Labor Day, and the time left for you to get ready is running out!

It's Labor Day weekend. For many, this is a time for rest and vacation. The stock market will pause as well, offering no new trading opportunities.

Some may think: does this mean we can only switch off and wait until the holiday is over to re-enter the market?

The answer, of course, is no.

Because we are not ordinary participants, we are those who understand how to create value through the logic of capital.

True high-net-worth investors never treat holidays as 'downtime.'

They see them as the window when others stop, but they accelerate.

The crypto market continues to operate 24/7.

Its shifting tides are precisely what allows your capital to keep working, even through the holiday.

And today, what I want to show you is an opportunity fresh enough, exciting enough, and promising enough to command your full attention: currency surfing.

Why do we say that currency surfing during the Labor Day holiday is an opportunity?

Because currency surfing is a form of ultra-short-term profit-making.

It is not about holding stubbornly, but about being agile and fast, just like a surfer balancing on the crest of a wave, capturing profit even if only for a fleeting moment.

In the crypto world, volatility is the very source of wealth.

While others fear volatility, we must learn to embrace it. For volatility is the wave itself—and without waves, how can you surf?

Some may ask: ‘Surfing sounds exciting, but with such big swings in the market, how do I know when to enter and when to exit? I can’ t sit in front of a chart 24/7, can I?’

That’s exactly where the key lies. Enter Acumeta.

It is no myth, but a highly efficient quantitative tool. It captures subtle market signals in real time, filters out the most promising wave to ride, and gives you clear guidance.

Your surfing skill level does not matter—what matters is your execution.

As long as you can receive the signal, and as long as you have the courage to take that step, you have the chance to earn your own ‘holiday surprise profit.’

A call to action

Pals, what I’m about to say next is the most important part.

If you want the Labor Day holiday to be more than barbecue smoke and beach sunshine, if you want it to deliver a tangible ‘wealth surprise,’ then you must act:

First, during the holiday, contact my assistant to receive Acumeta's real-time signals.

Second, keep your account funded and ready, don't wait until the signal comes only to find you have no ammunition.

Third, control your position within a reasonable range. With 5 – 15% you can experience the thrill of surfing while still preserving a safe bottom line.

I can say it responsibly, if you miss this window, you may regret it by the next holiday.

Because that's how the market works, if you fail to enter when the opportunity is clearest, by the time you wake up, the wave has already broken into someone else's account.

I look forward to seeing your holiday bring fresh, first-hand capital for the BOM subscription!

Opportunity never closes for holidays, it only depends on whether you take action.

Acumeta is already prepared to capture the crest of the wave; all you need to decide is whether you are willing to step onto the surfboard.

Remember:

For ordinary people, a holiday is for consumption; for winners, a holiday is for creation.

When ordinary people rest, wealth quietly changes hands.

And you have every chance to be among those early movers who use the holiday and its volatility to lock in profits.

So don't hesitate, don't wait.

Labor Day is not only the holiday of workers; it can also be your celebration of profit.

When others raise their glasses in celebration, let us raise ours as well, but for a different reason: because we caught the crest of the wave and drove profit straight into our accounts.

And when the holiday ends, we will witness the grand spectacle of global on-chain capital rushing to subscribe to BOM in advance. I look forward to seeing you among the true beneficiaries of the Early Bird Subscription Plan!

Next Monday at 2 p.m., join me again on the program as we explore this great movement of subscription preparation! Wishing you a joyful holiday!
