

Darlings of Profit in Rate-Cut Week:

Happy Friday! The air is filled with lightness and excitement—Wall Street's crowd is ready to shed their suits and head off for a long weekend. The market seems to be celebrating as well, everything appears so perfect, as if all worries had vanished with the sound of Friday's closing bell.

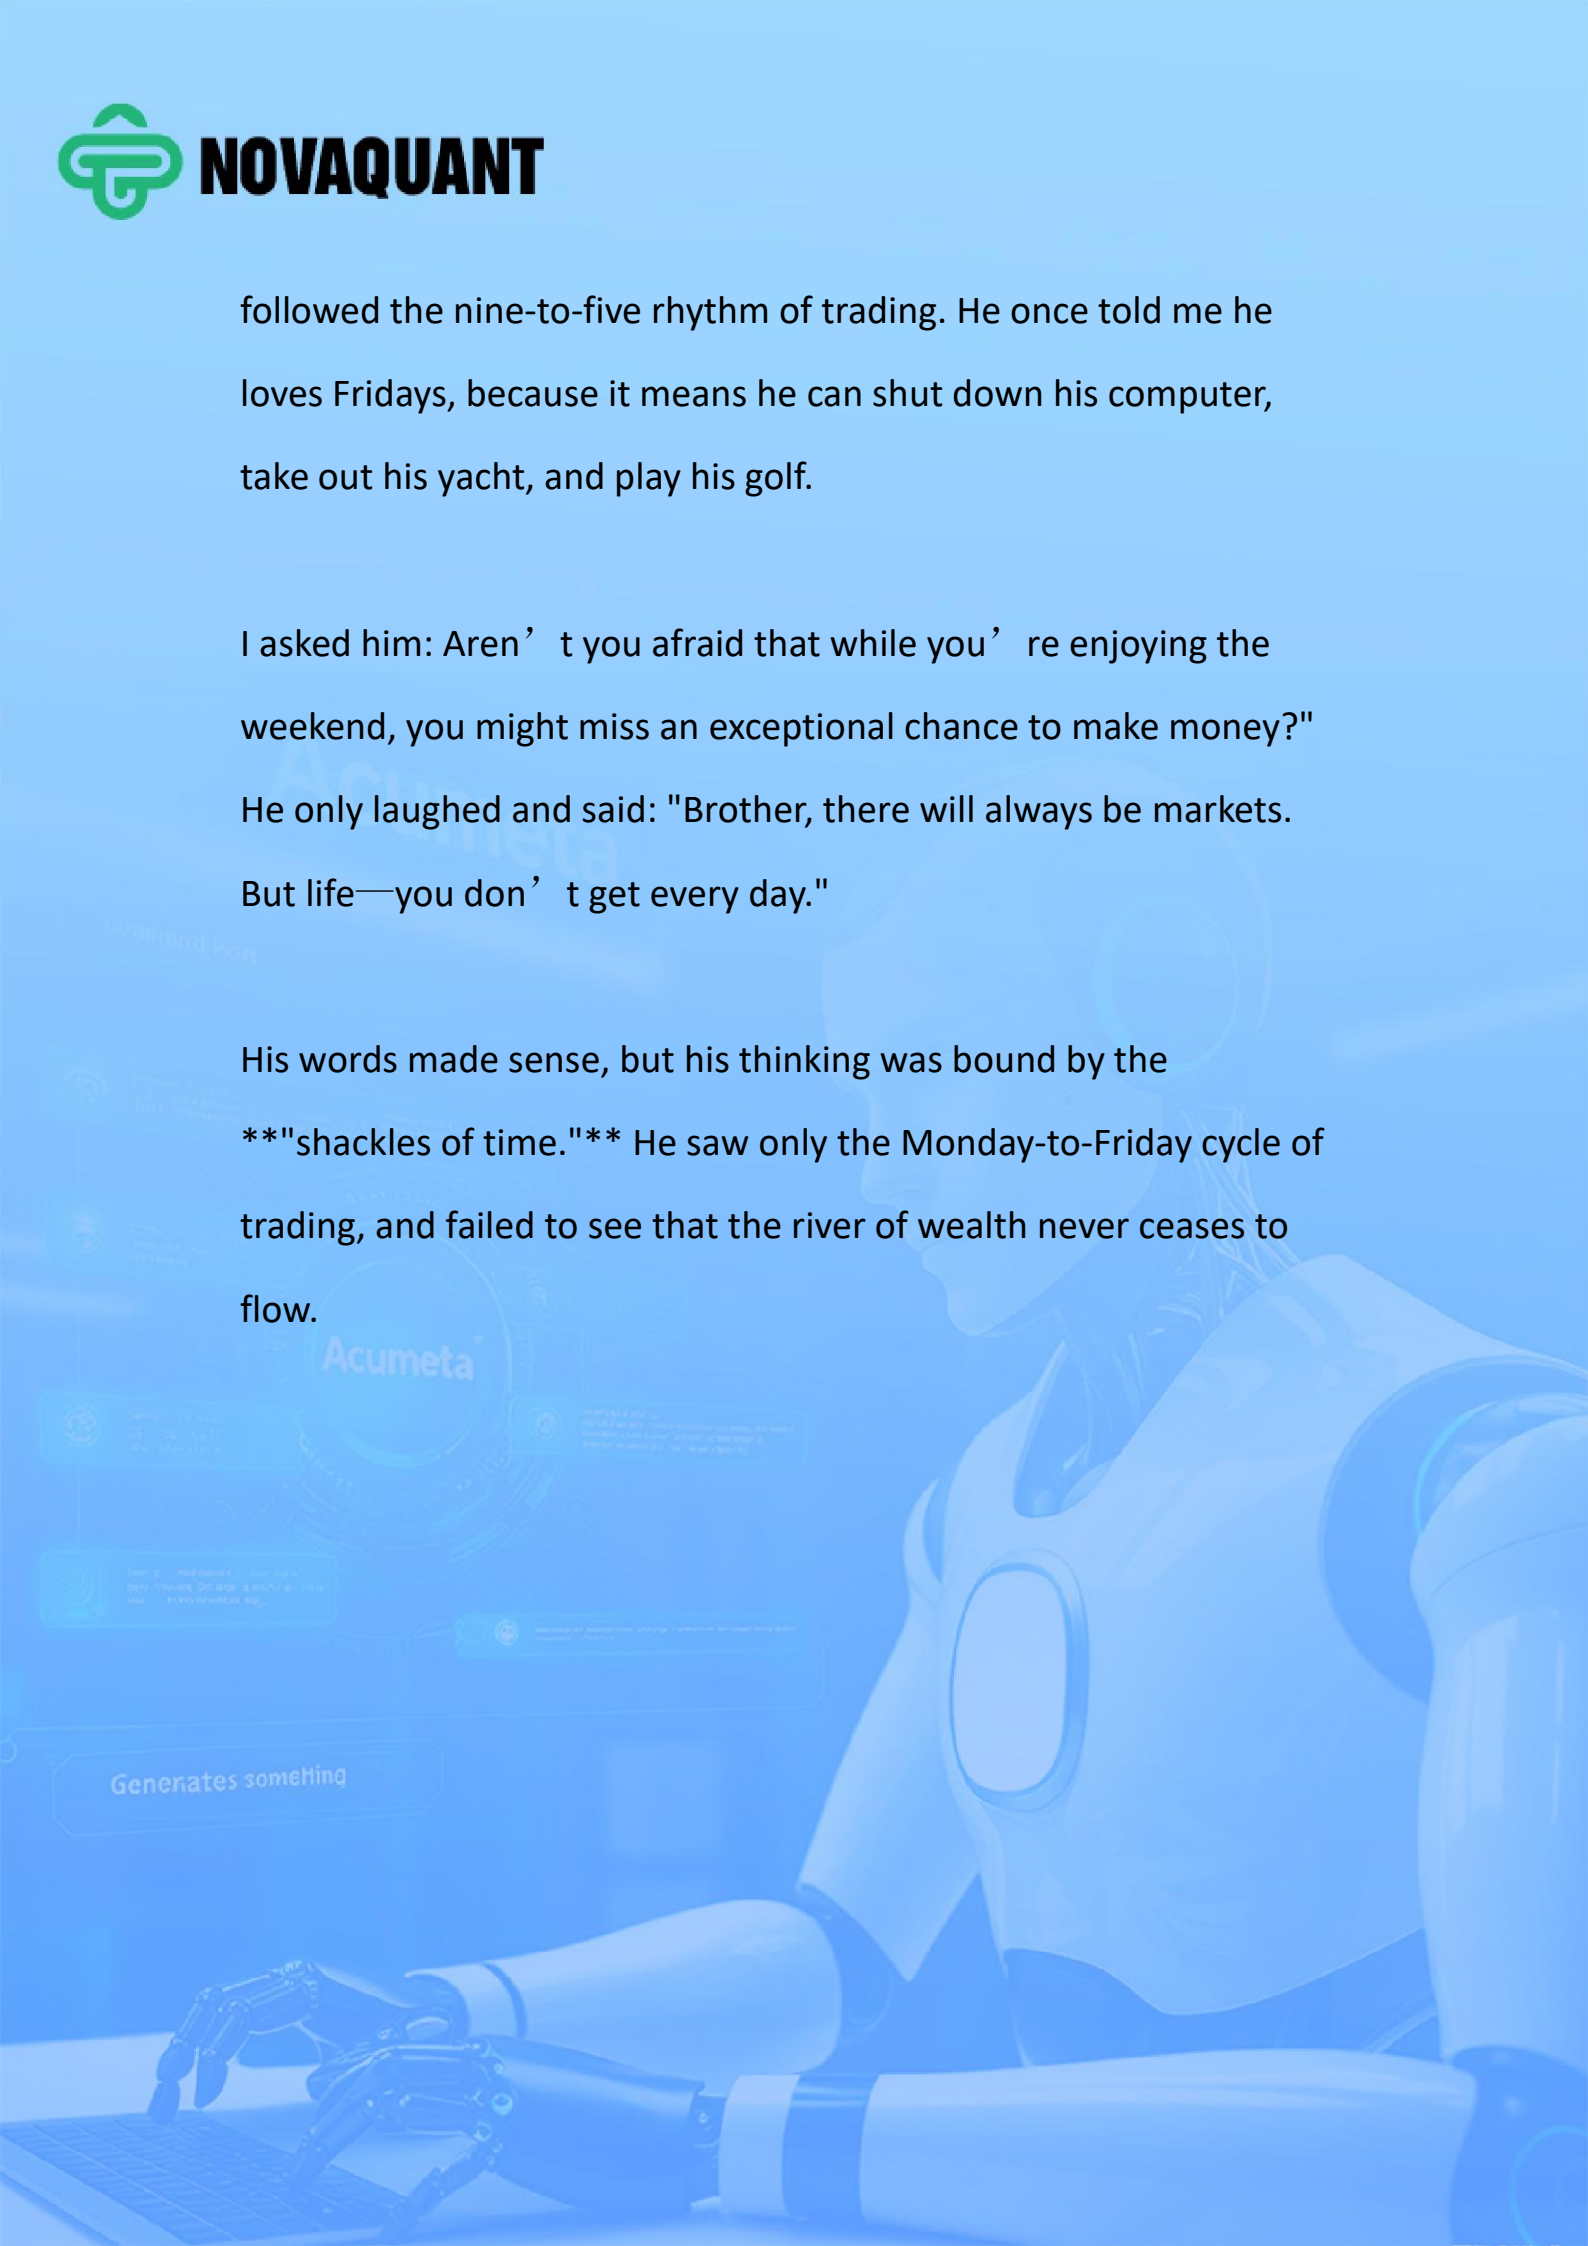

But for us, the "currency surfers," the Friday revelry is only just beginning! Our "trading hall" never closes, because we know that weekends are often the best time to discover the next great wave of Generates something wealth.

I have a friend, a classic Wall Street "veteran" His entire life has followed the nine-to-five rhythm of trading. He once told me he loves Fridays, because it means he can shut down his computer, take out his yacht, and play his golf.

I asked him: Aren't you afraid that while you're enjoying the weekend, you might miss an exceptional chance to make money?" He only laughed and said: "Brother, there will always be markets. But life—you don't get every day."

His words made sense, but his thinking was bound by the **"shackles of time."** He saw only the Monday-to-Friday cycle of trading, and failed to see that the river of wealth never ceases to flow.

Looking back on this rate-cut week, we have been through so much. The market's volatility struck like a tsunami—fierce, sudden, and utterly unforeseen.

Yet in the midst of such turbulence, our currency surfing program stood out all the more brightly.

Of course, I would not claim our strategy is flawless. To be honest, on the most volatile days we also encountered a few minor imperfections. Surfing is no different—you cannot expect to stay balanced on the board every time. Sometimes the wave will knock you down, the salty water burns your throat, and you fall hard. But it is precisely in falling that you discover new balance, learning to ride the next, greater wave with more skill and agility.

Our currency surfing this week was just like that: there were adjustments, there were refinements, but when you step back and take in the whole picture, the outlook shines brighter than the weekend night sky.

Never forget, America's financial history has always been a textbook of "tides rising and falling."

In the 1980s, Paul Volcker fought inflation with sky-high interest rates. How many thought the U.S. economy would be crushed? And yet, the following two decades became the golden era of U.S. equities.

In 2008, the subprime crisis hit; in 2020, the pandemic shut the world down. Everyone said the end had come. But 10 years later, 5 years later—Bitcoin had risen nearly 10,000x.

Today, once again, we stand at a turning point, rate cuts are only the spark; the real drama of wealth is still to come.

So let me give you a clear signal: Rate-Cut Week is not a full stop, but a starting line. It is like reaching mile 20 in a marathon—yes, you feel exhausted, but you are only now entering the most exhilarating stretch. With our currency surfing plan, in the days ahead we will lead you step by step into wealth channels that are more frequent, more resilient, and more imaginative.

Why am I not enthusiastic about trading the stock market right now?
What am I concerned about?

From history, I've drawn this conclusion: to me, rate cut = the peak.

Since 2000, the Fed has initiated 3 rate-cut cycles, and each was followed by some form of recession.

The first: 2001 to 2003. It began with the bursting of the dot-com bubble. The Fed cut rates to rescue the market, but then came 9/11, the Enron scandal, the Afghanistan war. Throughout the rate-cut cycle, U.S. equities were pinned down by one event after another.

The second: September 2007 to December 2008, coinciding with the subprime crisis. By the time rate cuts ended, the market was still falling. In 2009, the European debt crisis arrived.

The third: August 2019 to March 2020, marked by the global health crisis. Warren Buffett accurately predicted a drawdown of more than 50% in U.S. equities.

And now we face the fourth. You see, Fed rate cuts have a kind of magic power: in theory they benefit the economy; in reality, they almost always end up drawing out economic risks.

At the start of a rate-cut cycle, few notice anything. By the time people realize, the crisis has already sunk deep into the marrow. This is the warning my historical experience imprints on me, and I hope it may be of help to you as well!

The currency depreciation brought on by the Fed's rate cuts has inspired a new way of thinking about investment:

Global equity market capitalization is projected to surpass $150 trillion by the end of this year. Since the tariff orders in April, it has risen 31%; from the lows earlier in 2020, it has grown 137%—a truly historic global bull market.

Beyond the post-pandemic recovery, the surge has been fueled by extraordinary levels of debt creation and monetary injection. Public debt is expected to reach 100% of GDP within 30 years. In this reshaped trading world, the current short-term rally is even more extreme than the dot-com era, when markets gained 86% in 5 years. Today, the global price-to-earnings ratio has climbed from 25x to 30x.

That means when a company pays its workers and is left with $1 in net profit, the capital market now grants it an equity valuation of $30. One dollar of profit commands a 30-fold multiple. Selling money earned can be far more lucrative than reinvesting to produce more. And those unable to participate in this wealth-creation process can only watch as the fireworks in the sky grow ever brighter.

Therefore, scarce and deflationary assets will enter an unprecedented expansion phase under the twin forces of monetary oversupply and depreciation. That is the future investment value of Bitcoin and Ethereum! Today, you need not rush to a conclusion, nor reject it simply because you cannot yet see the facts.

Behind every truly great success lies a common logic: the ability to price long-term strategy correctly.

Those who dare to place their bets on the future today will be the ones to reap returns tomorrow that exceed conventional imagination.

The Fed's rate cuts are merely a macro backdrop; the dollar's depreciation is only an external signal. What truly determines the direction of future wealth is how we, at this historical juncture, choose the right strategic path.

At my Quantitative Think Tank Center, we have, over the past several months, shouldered a far greater mission. Our purpose is not merely to provide individual members with trading signals, nor simply to help capture short-term profits. It is to construct a new long-term framework—for the community as a whole, for enterprises, and even for the future financial order itself

What we must do today is to make the Acumeta quantitative system a new pioneering tool of finance—redefining the very order of wealth.

And this path cannot be pursued by myself and my team alone. It requires you—all of our long-term members, all who truly believe in "strategic long-termism"—to join hands with us. Only then can we maintain composure amid short-term volatility and be the ones still smiling at the end of the long road of wealth.

Last night I convened an emergency meeting with the team. It was an unusual meeting—marked by fierce debate, calm modeling, and even moments of emotional reflection.

Over recent months, we have received abundant feedback from members around the world: some say our trading signals must be more precise; others call for more differentiated services; still others hope for long-term, steady quantitative guidance. There are also voices insisting we must cultivate a stronger sense of belonging and honor within our community culture.

After repeated rounds of debate and exchange, we finally arrived at an answer—the founding of the Quantitative Winners Legion.

You may think of it as the "allied forces" in a campaign of wealth. In history, America's victory in World War II was not achieved by a single general or a single nation, but by the strength of the alliance—through collective strategy and a unified belief.

Today, our legion has the same purpose, to gather every member with foresight, resolve, and a conviction in long-termism into a shared community of destiny.

"Why call it the Quantitative Winners Legion?"

Because a winner is not someone who happens to make quick money in a single trade.

A true winner is the one who can still stand tall after 10 or 20 years of financial waves.

Being a winner is not a matter of chance, but of certainty.

The mark of a winner is not the sprint, but the marathon.

And what we seek to build is precisely such a legion: one able to endure cycles, withstand volatility, and continuously expand the curve of wealth.

Many of you may have heard the story of Warren Buffett's early investment. He once bought a small textile mill. To most, it looked like a mistake, thin margins, a declining industry.

But Buffett did not give up. Through iteration and reinvestment, he gradually transformed that company into what we now know as Berkshire Hathaway—a vast investment empire. In other words, mistakes are not what we should fear, what is truly dangerous is the absence of a team, a strategy, or conviction. And the Quantitative Winners Legion exists to ensure that each of us, even when faced with temporary volatility, has the patience of strategy and the strength of collective effort to ultimately reach the grandeur of an empire.

What we are building today is precisely that: not merely the profit of a single trade, but a culture of sustainable quantitative strategy designed for the legacy of the next decade.

This legion will be structured with clear tiers, with titles of distinction and exclusive rights. You will advance from "Explorer," to "Quantitative Pioneer," to "Strategy Master," and finally to the rank of "Empire Architect."

Each step is not only an elevation of wealth in numbers, but an expansion of perspective, of strategic horizon, of vision itself.

And all of this is not a slogan, but a concrete plan.

We will refine the precision of our signals, raising Acumeta's win rate to above 85%, and even beyond 90%;

We will expand differentiated services to meet the needs of members across capital tiers;

We will establish specialized guidance so that every member of the legion can receive one-on-one support;

In the future global launch, legion members will be among the very first to experience it firsthand.

This is not merely a quantitative program—it is a long journey of wealth. This is not a fleeting opportunity—it is the opportunity of an era. What we can do today is to seize this moment and become the founders of this legion.

On Mount Rushmore, the four presidential faces embody the American spirit—courage, vision, wisdom, and resilience. Today, our Quantitative Winners Legion must also carve its mark upon the Mount Rushmore of finance. Decades from now, when people speak of the history of wealth transformation, they will say: In that era of dollar depreciation and repeated rate cuts, there was a group who built a new order. They were called—the Quantitative Winners Legion.

[The Great Wealth Wave of Rate-Cut Liberation Day] — Currency

Ladies and gentlemen, esteemed future winners:

Let me begin once again with gratitude. To all of our members who have continued to engage with currency surfing and share your feedback—thank you. Your voices are the compass for our team’ s refinement, the fuel that drives us forward.

Every suggestion, every reflection, even every criticism, is itself a form of wealth. For it is precisely these voices that allow us to correct course quickly, so that all who place their trust in us may, in time, reap greater rewards.

At this pivotal turning point in wealth, the [Quantitative Winners Legion] is officially founded!

Well, history often turns at its watersheds when least expected.

Some choose hesitation, others simply follow the crowd. But true winners are those who, at the turning point, dare to take a step of their own

I hope each of you can find the level of engagement that makes the growth of your wealth feel most comfortable. And note my choice of word—"comfortable". Why? Because investing is not a sprint, but a marathon. You must choose a pace suited to yourself, rather than be dragged along by others.

Some are suited to high-frequency surfing; others to steady, long-term positioning. Some prefer to brave the waves; others to lie back and collect income. The value of the legion is to help you find your place, and to accompany you, through the strength of a system, all the way to the finish line.

Let me speak plainly: if you still expect to rely on disorderly skirmishes, or to depend solely on group trading signals to receive more services, then I must warn you—this path will not take you far.

If you cannot find your positioning, if you only ever "follow," then I'm sorry, our services may diminish, or even cease.

Why?

Not because we are unkind, but because we must focus our people, resources, and capital on those truly willing to step into the [Quantitative Winners Legion]

For this legion is not a slogan, it is a strategic collective built to prevail in a campaign of wealth lasting 5 years, even 10.

Either you step aboard and become part of the legion, or you keep wandering—and miss an opportunity that belongs to this era.

At the end of the day, it isn't promises that convince the world—it's the wealth results visible in your account. Until this afternoon!

Generates something

Pals,

Happy Friday! Today is no ordinary trading day, it is what makes the hearts of traders on Wall Street and around the world beat faster: "Triple Witching Day." Stock options, index futures, and single-stock futures all expire and settle at once. It is like three undercurrents converging at the same floodgate—naturally the market will surge with turbulence, even erupt into a fierce tug-of-war.

Many eyes are fixed on crypto screens, and when they see coins fall, panic sets in.

But what you are seeing in crypto's decline is simply the market clearing itself, like a tectonic adjustment after a volcanic eruption. Those unprepared are like bystanders at the foot of the mountain, buried under ash, but those who came ready with surfboards can ride the force and carve a new trajectory of their own. Currency surfing trades are that surfboard prepared for you.

Wealth has never been linear, it is always winding, volatile—like the waves, like breathing, like life itself. You must grow accustomed to its rises and falls, rather than fantasize about an endless upward line.

True wisdom is this: when others are in panic, you are able to stand firm—and even draw strength from the decline. That is the core philosophy of our currency surfing: whether the market falls or not is not the point, what matters is whether we have secured the initiative.

When people ask me, "Why does crypto fall on Triple Witching Day?" I simply smile and say, "That's a required course the market is teaching us." Decline is the norm; winning is the choice. Once you understand that falling prices are not the enemy but another form of opportunity, you will no longer fear them, you will be eager to welcome the next wave.

From our recent weeks of currency surfing, we have also discovered that users with smaller and more vulnerable capital should be afforded greater protection, while those with larger trading positions should have stronger guarantees of profit.

It is like when we choose to fly United Airlines from San Francisco to New York. The arrival time is the same, yet when we purchase a ticket we may choose business class or economy. The destination is identical, but the level of service and the travel experience are entirely different.

This reflects a genuine need for personalized service. It may well usher my Quantitative Think Tank Center into a new era of service—one in which we can design more attractive programs tailored to the preferences of our members. This is worth our careful discussion.

And if you wish to receive such offerings, be sure to share your feedback with my assistant right away !

The process of currency surfing always carries elements of random volatility. Imagine, when we place a currency surfing order, the competition is not only among our internal members. Within a short window, there may also be a flood of orders from North America, along with potential participation from Europe, and even investors in Asia staying up late. Everyone wants to capture victory in currency surfing at that one perfect moment.

This can lead to irregular market swings immediately after order creation, which in turn demands an extremely high margin of safety. That is why, whenever we engage in currency surfing, I consistently remind everyone of the importance of structuring secure [advantageous positions]. When your idle funds are being eroded by bank deposit rates under monetary easing, or when your stock returns are at hand, that is the time to consider selling them and reallocating into strengthening your currency surfing [advantageous positions]. Doing so not only raises your margin of safety, but is also the best choice for amplifying profits.

Look at the truly exceptional minds—their way of life can be summed up simply: to love, to care, to help, to support, to give warmth and love.

And in turn, they receive more warmth, more love, more wealth, and even reputation.

Well, perhaps I am not yet among the most brilliant. But I have chosen to live by these values. I founded the Quantitative Think Tank Center because I wished to give first—to benefit my members, to help every investor in need, to raise their abilities. Every course I have offered, every lesson of knowledge, I gave freely.

**To share my Acumeta signals on currency surfing, to help others realize the appreciation of their wealth—in the end, I will earn their choice: the choice to engage in long-term cooperation with my quantitative strategy services, the choice to continue striving alongside our Quantitative Think Tank mission. Even when the service is paid, my members will choose me. This is what I seek, this is my aim, this is my original intention.****

Reflect for a moment—have you not, through this experience, perceived it? From my quantitative strategy programs and courses, have you not recognized the goodwill and assistance extended by every member of this team?

Here lies the answer: many years ago, I received from my mentor a piece of wisdom from the mysterious East:

Those who give love will receive love; those who send forth blessings will have blessings return.

When my mentor first taught me these words, I did not grasp their true meaning. It was only when I founded the Quantitative Think Tank Center that I came to understand the life value and significance carried in this phrase of deep philosophy.

As described in the German classic [Siddhartha]: The self you see is not the true you; the self others see is not the true you; only the self you see reflected in others is the real you.

They all express the same truth: the greater the absolute value of one's capacity, the more love and good fortune one attracts. So how do we understand this?

In truth, the universe makes no distinctions between heaven and earth, between things or people. At this point you may ask: if there is no karma, if the laws of the universe are indifferent to good and evil, then why should I still choose to be a good person?

Of course, you must still choose to be good. The universe has no emotions, but it has laws, it operates by the principles of frequency and resonance. The universe does not care for your loves or hatreds, but it perceives the strength of energy. What it receives is an absolute value.

Let me give a simple example. In your heart, you may think: "I don't want to love this person anymore." But the universe does not understand the word "don't". All it perceives is that you are projecting intense emotional energy onto this person, that your energy's absolute value is very high. And so the universe keeps pushing you toward that person, drawing your life closer to them. This is why, so often, the harder you try to let go of someone, the harder it becomes; the more you resist, the more force you feel. That is why I do not believe in the karmic notions of good and evil. **Yet I still choose to be a good person, because I know that only when my heart generates thoughts of goodness can I resonate with what is true, good, and beautiful, and only then will such things be drawn into my life.****

**The second level of understanding is that gain and loss are one.****

Only what you give away is what you truly gain. Whatever you desire, give it first. If you want love, then love others first. If you want money, then first bring benefit to others. This isn't blind self-sacrifice—it's the way the universe works. At this point, someone may say: "But I have done this before. I loved someone, yet they let me down."

What I want to tell you is this: my dear, you did receive something—you received love itself, not that particular person. That person was never what mattered. The one who truly lost was them. They lost the chance to experience the most beautiful, most sincere emotion this world can offer; they lost an opportunity to hold both love and soul within their life;

I have always believed that to love is more important than to be loved. When you only want to be loved, it reveals a sense of lack.

Do you remember what we discussed above—the law of resonance and frequency in the universe? Your sense of lack only attracts more lack.

**But when you give, you feel your own abundance, richness, and strength. And that abundance draws more abundance into your life.

Love does not diminish; it does not cancel itself out. Love multiplies, it compounds, it grows ever more. And so it is with everything beautiful in this world.**

This is more than the name of a team—it is a new creed of wealth: the [Quantitative Winners Legion]. It is not a mere slogan, not a marketing gimmick dressed up in words, but a vision and an intention we share: to make quantitative strategy trading a new way of life, a pursuit that transcends money itself and reaches into value and meaning.

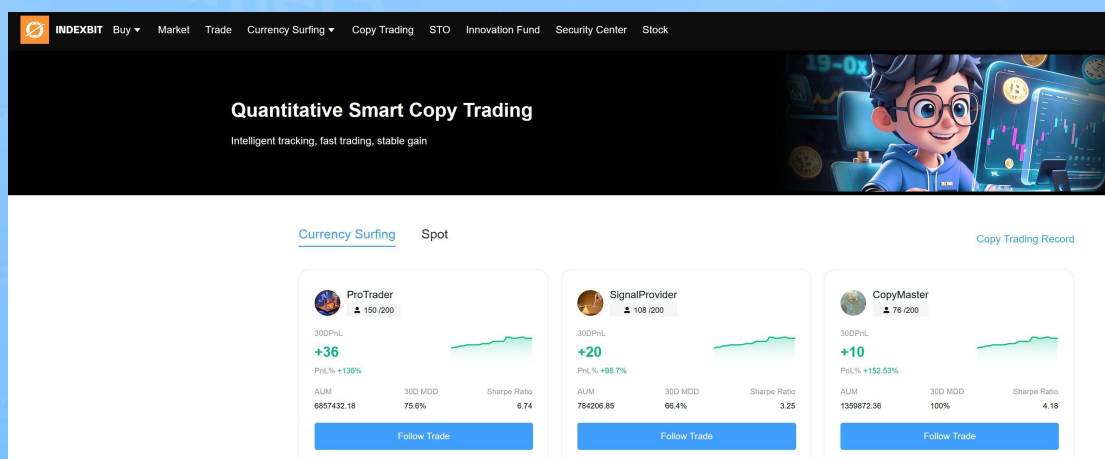

Whether you come from the financial circles of New York, the venture capital community of Los Angeles, or from Texas, Florida, Asia, or Europe—you are here today because we all believe in this: that wealth is not only a number on a balance sheet. It is a capacity, a conviction, and a spirit that can be passed down. As countless entrepreneurs in American history have shown—behind wealth lies the union of dreams and execution.

One of the core values of American society is diversity and inclusiveness.

Wherever you come from, as long as you are willing to work, you can find your place. The personalized services of the Quantitative Winners Legion are an extension of this very spirit.

What we do is weave these diverse needs together and create layered, differentiated services, so that each of you can claim your own "seat of wealth" here.

A new capability is about to be unlocked within the Quantitative Winners Legion: Profit-Trigger Orders and Smart Copy Trading.

This is more than the launch of a new tool, it is a complete transformation of the way we invest.

It elevates our member services from single-strategy signals to an investment choice that is fully automated, highly efficient, secure, reliable—and, one might even say, comfortable enough to set your mind at ease.

In the past, you had to be like a driver gripping the steering wheel, eyes fixed on the road ahead, no matter how congested or complex the path. You had to control everything yourself. But starting today, you have the function of "autopilot." You can sit back in the car, sip a coffee, even enjoy the scenery—because the system, following established rules, will bring you safely to your destination. That is the allure of smart copy trading.

It is like Tesla's Robotaxi—once you experience it, you will know the thrill!

In the U.S. capital markets, many of the greatest transformations have come from revolutions in efficiency. Henry Ford invented the assembly line, turning the automobile from a luxury into a household necessity. Jeff Bezos built the e-commerce platform, making shopping no longer a chore but a simple click. Today, the upgrade of our Quantitative Winners Legion follows the very same logic.

It turns investing from "screen-watching anxiety" into "automated profit." It turns wealth management from "cumbersome and complex" into "effortless enjoyment."

We must admit, human emotion is the greatest source of risk in the market. Greed, fear, hesitation—these are the root causes of loss. Automation, by design, strips away these human weaknesses, making trading an act of calm, rational, rule-based execution.

In the United States, less than 10% of the mileage flown by commercial aircraft is manually controlled by the pilot. The other 90% is handled by autopilot. Why? Because autopilot systems are better than humans at avoiding the risks of fatigue, emotion, and oversight. Investing is no different, fully automated smart copy trading is your umbrella of protection, helping you avoid detours along the way.

What the Quantitative Winners Legion gives you is an aircraft already tuned to its best condition, ready for you to board and take flight. You need not worry about it falling, because we have prepared ample safety mechanisms.

Acumeta Smart Copy Trading is not a mere technological upgrade, it is a service upgrade. It is not a cold, lifeless program, but a warm safeguard for your wealth. It marks our legion's true entry into a new era of personalization, intelligence, and human-centered design.

In the past, you may have felt that investing was a lonely battle—staring alone at candlestick charts, struggling against the market.

But from today onward, you are no longer alone. You have the Quantitative Winners Legion. You have a fully automated smart assistant. You have a system worthy of your trust. This is not the end—it is a new beginning.

Of course, whether you choose such a service depends entirely on you, read the invitation carefully, and select the option that best suits you!

Today is a special day—the [Quantitative Winners Legion] is officially launched.

This is not simply the rollout of a new service, but a reshaping of the entire wealth landscape.

I hope that once you have carefully read this special service invitation, you will prepare your own capital strength in earnest—ready for the personalized signal service set to begin next week. Because this will no longer be broad, generic prompts to the group, but signals tailored to your positions, your capital, and your goals—crafted exclusively for you.

And for tonight and the coming weekend, Acumeta's currency surfing signals are already prepared for you.

Please contact my assistant directly to receive them!

This will allow you to adapt early to the personalized service of the future.

You will discover that signals are no longer cold numbers, but guidance resonating closely with your investment account.

Ladies and gentlemen:

I know that some of you may already have read through the special service invitation. If that document was the blueprint, then what I am about to share is the action guide for becoming a great winner of on-chain wealth.

I stand here to call on you: get your capital ready, and be fully prepared for the personalized signal service starting next week.

This is not merely an investment. It is an upgrade of wealth, an upgrade of life itself.

From "general" to "personalized": your new chapter of wealth.

In the past, our currency surfing signals were like a public pool—we welcomed everyone to swim. But we could not satisfy each individual's needs.

And now, we have built for you a private pool. Here, every drop of water is tailored to your positions and capital. Every wave is designed to give you the most precise surfing experience.

A solemn invitation: become a hero of the new era; a hero is one who dares to challenge himself, who dares to seize opportunity, who dares to create the future.

And our Quantitative Winners Legion is creating a new generation of heroes—the great winners of the on-chain era! Are you willing to join us and become a hero of this new era?

We're waiting for you! Enjoy your weekend, and we will meet again next Monday!
